THE EVACUATION OF COLUMBUS. Further Details.

[From the Chicago Tribune.] Only a part of the machinery of Gen. Halleck before which Columbus has been vacated was made to appear in the earliest dispatches. We wish to do the Rebels the justice to state that they were not driven headlong down the river by the threatened advance of Commodore Foote, though we believe he would have proved that a sufficient ground for their with; drawal. The completeness of Gen. Halleck's plans did not allow this as the sole dependence for the final squeeze to Rebel possession in Kentucky. To show this, the accempanying disgram will come in play, and other facts we shall present, will intelligently explain with its help, just why the Rebels found it convenient to leave. Gen. Halleck's official dispatch tells a part of the story. Our advance guard from Paducah rode into Co-

The Rebel Generals, at their leisure, may make up their dispatches. If they tell the truth it will be about as follows: Gen. Pope, in Missouri, left Commerce, but a few miles above Cairo, and marched his strong column to New Madrid, a point on the Mississippi river due east of Union City, on the Missouri side. A large force from Paducah, and withdrawn from the Cumberland, proceeded to Mayfield, and thence the advance directly westward upon Columbus. Nor was this all, for a third strong column of troops, flushed with victory on the Tennessee and Cumberland, seized, or were about to seize, Union City, cutting off retreat by railroad to Memphis. Thus it will be seen that the Robels were cooped like rats in a trap, and had they remained, could have been everhauled at leisure. They wisely withdrew, and with this explanation our readers have our dispatches announcing the event. The Rebels have done many more cowardly acts in this war than to abandon Columbus.

The correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette gives the following interesting details:

The fortifications at Columbus are erected on a bluff about 150 feet high, immediately north of the town. The position is admirably adapted to defense. By cutting down a number of trees on the Belmont point nearly opposite, the rebels were enabled to command a perfect mile above it. There are, or rather there tried to borrow, swearing to pay him at such a place in a week; but the critter told me he today.

Was accidentally wounded on Priday night, died to day.

Col. Broadhead, of the Michigan cavalry, has second about - feet above this, and the third | too little to divide. on the top of the hill. It is difficult to say how many guns either of these mounted, as the rebels threw most of their heavy pieces into the river or attempted to do so, though many stopped on the bank, where they are now decent a burial as I could under an old log,

It is presumed that the three main batteries mounted fifty guns, and we have the evidence of citizens who frequently visited the camp, to this effect. An attacking party would have had one great advantage. There was no shelter lought to be hung." erceted for the artitlerymen; and those who worked the guns in the lower batteries would be exposed during the entire action to the fire I silence. of the gunboats. The water battery was on a "Then you really think you ought to be sort of table about fifty feet long and twenty bung." he asked with some compassion, as he feet deep. It formed an excellent mark for a good gunner, and if the gunboats could have held out against it for any length of time, it would have been silenced. The upper batteries were not quite so much exposed, but in none of them were the men sufficiently well sheltered from bursting shell, grapeshot or canister.

The entire works on the summit of the hill covers an area of about four miles. The fortifinations are equally strong on all sides, and calculated to repulse an army attacking from the south as well as from the north. The fort can be reached from the town of Columbus by four different roads, out through the high hills at an immense outlay of labor.

The quarters for the troops are small cabins or huts, about six feet square, built of clay, by digging into the earth three feet, for the body of the tenement, and making out of the soil thus evacuated a slanting roof, which in a majority of cases is well shingled. There are enough of these apartments to accommodate already told me." thirty thousand men. Regimental and company officers' quarters are constructed in the same manner, but a little more tastily finished

Near the river, below the water battery, is the principal magazine of the fort. It is a subterranean work, about 20 feet square, easy of access from all parts of the fortifications. About half way up the bluff, 75 feet above this, is another magazine, equal in size and similar in construction to the first.

The fort is supplied with water from the river, by means of a force pump worked by an

Among the objects which excited curiosity to-day was Pillow's great chain, designed to span the Mississippi, so as to prevent the downward passage of the Federal gunboats. It is a very strong and heavy-looking affair, stretching down the hill and into the river, where, I believe, it is broken.

The rebel forces at Columbus numbered over 20,000 on Sunday week, when the gunboat fleet came down the river, and was prevented by a flag of truce from reconneitering or hung." attacking. They were under the impression then that they could not resist an attack from the gunboats.

The evacuation of the place commenced a week ago to-day. It was carried on rapidly. Every wagon within miles around was impressed to transport stores and ammunition to the depot of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad-a distance of about three miles. Civilians were entirely excluded from the camp on and after the 25th ult.

General Polk left Columbus on Thursday, the 25th, for some point South, supposed to be New Orleans.

By Sunday last all the infantry had gone. General Cheatham then departed, leaving the fort in charge of about 1,300 cavalry, with instructions to burn the camp, and fly on the approach of the Federals. This last command left on Monday morning, baving destroyed

Mant of Panel The troops that left Columbus went to three different places one-third to Jackson, Tenn .: one-third to Island No. 10; and the remainder started for Nashville, but where they went to I am not informed.

The rebels did not burn the depot of the Mobile and Ohio railroad, nor did they destroy the track in the vicinity of Columbus. They left in too great haste to do any damage to this end of the road. I believe they destroyed a culvert or two beyond Moscow, about twenty miles from this place.

1 Among the charming customs of the Stathese people is one which particularly commends itself to people who hate children and are bothered by noisy boys. Homicide in Siam is punishable at a regular tariff of prices. Thus, the penalty for killing a babe of from one to three months is six "ticul," or about $3.50; for a child of four years about $10; for a boy of 15 about $15; and for a man between 26 and 40 nearly $30 Beyond the age of 40 years the penalties decrease, so that it is no more expensive to kill an old man from 86 to 90 years than an infant of two months. Women can be killed at two-thirds of the rates for males. Another pleasing custom is that which allows a man to hire out his wife to his creditor as a slave, and thus cancel his debt by

A MURDER TRIAL IN ARKANSAW.

Thomas Tod, who traveled in the Arkansaw country many years ago, before it became a State of the Union, relates the following droll trial for murder: He had stopped at a log hut called a hotel, and had a good healthy night's rest, but was awakened at sunrise by Rox, a rough stranger who had been his traveling companion the previous day.

"Stranger," said the rough customer, "I'm sorry to wake you up, but the fact is I've got something on my mind, and couldn't wait no longer. Won't you go out a little way with

"Where to?" I asked. "Well, I want to go and call on Judge D.; I've got something on my mind -must out-I tried liquor last night; but couldn't keep it down. I sint a drinking man, no how, and feel like a dog. Come along with me and be my friend."

There was a bold frankness in his manner that I could not withstand. I accordingly arese and equipped myself, and we walked to the house of the magistrate, who sent word that he would be up in a couple of hours. "But tell him," said my companion to the servant, "I want to see him on a matter of life and death. "Da's no use o' dat," grimmed the negro, massa don't care bout life and death till he git he sleep out." We left the house, but John Rox, as he called himself, did not allude to his pressing business more than to say, "When we see the judge you'll know all."

We returned to breakfest, and I observed that Rox refused the morning dram presented to him by the landlord, and ate sparingly. Something was evidently preying on his mind, and I anxiously awaited the hour to hear it developed The time came, and we were admitted to the presence of the dispensor of justice, who was a man of wealth, good spirits. and rotundity of person.
"Well," said the judge, "what's the mat-

"Why, you see," said Rox, "day before yesterday I staid at 'C.' all day and hadn't a confounded cent, and as I wouldn't chisel, I went without eating. Yestarday morning I started off as hungry as a panther, and so I rode along, thinks I what am I to do? I'm view of the river for a distance of four miles. | above cheating any man out of a dinner, but

"How much have you got?" says I.

"Two fifty," says he.
"Now," thinks I "that is too little to divide." So while he was looking another way, of them failed to reach their destination, and I shot him through the head, and gin him as and took the two dollars and a half. But if won't do, my conscience torments me. I am sorry for it, and wish the fellow had his money back if be could only be alive; but between you and I, as it's too late for that, I think I

The judge called his black boy, ordered three pipes and tobacco, and we smoked in whiffed a cloud of smoke toward the ceiling. "I do, in fact," answered John, emitting a similar volume of the same gas.

The judge smoked and considered sgain.

"Well, we'll try to hang you," he added. There was gratitude in John's eye, as he answered . "Thank you that will ease my con-

The judge knocked the ashes from his pipe and spoke: "Well, come here in half an hour. I'll try to get a jury.

Rox and myself laying down our pipes on the table, were about leaving, when the judge asked us to take a drink, which having done, we bade him good morning. In half an hour we returned, when we found twelve men smoking and drinking with the magistrate, awaiting us. We were politely requested to sit down.

"Now," said Judge D., addressing himself to Rox, "tell these gentlemen what you have Whereupon Rox made the same statement.

"Now, gentlemen," continued the judge, "I wish you to say if this gentleman-Mr. Rox your name is-eh! -well-there's some fine old brandy, make yourself perfectly at hor swhether, gentlemen, you find John Rox guilty of murder. In addition to what he has said, I have sent out and found the body just as he has described." The jury smoked, rose up, took a little brandy and water, and smoked again, until at last one of them, who appeared to be the foreman, said : "The case is tolerably clear, and we rather think he's guilty."

"There's more tobacco on the table." said the judge to Rox, " the best you can find anywhere-you've heard what these gentlemen have said-well, I don't like to tell you in my own house, but"----

"Let there be no hindrance," replied John, lighting his pipe.
"Well then," said the judge, "come here at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and I'll have you

John looked disconcerted, and appeared mortified at the idea of asking a favor. have been so kind to me," said John, "that I hardly dare ask you for anything more." "Not at all," said the judge, "out with it, you are welcome to it before you ask." "Well," said Rox, "to-morrow is my ague day, and the shakes come on at eleven-if you would be so good as to hang me at ten."

"With the greatest of pleasure," answered the good-hearted judge, shaking John's hand, "ten let it be."

Accordingly John returned to the inn-paid up his bill; and he next morning was bung as the clock struck ten.

Gen. Hill's army fell back towards Middleburg.
command, and marched through Wheatland and waterford, taking prisoners at both places and putting the scattered forces of the enemy to flight. Shortly after sunrise this morning he took possession of Fort Johnson which was renamed by the officers "Fort Geary." He then entered the town with flags flying and bayonets fixed.

The rear of the rebel troops, who had thought this one of their greatest strongholds, could be discerned through a glass retreating.

The command took many prisoners and stores, and are in possession of the bank, post office and public buildings. Forts Beauregard and Evans were also taken.

THE NEWS CONFIRMED. CHARLESTOWN, VA., March 9, p. m.—The report of last night that our forces had occupied Leesburg is officially confirmed. The enemy evacuated the town on Friday morning, taking all their supplies and baggage to Middleburg, but it is not known whether the troops retired thither or started towards Winchester. Col. Geary occupied the town unresisted, yesterday morning, capturing considerable property accredited to the rebel army. All was quiet at our outposts last night. CAPTURE OF REBEL PROPERTY-SEIZURE OF CON-FEDERATE SCRIP.

CRAIG - GREAT LOSS ON BOTH SIDES. DENVER CITY, Friday, March 7, via Julesburg Saturday, March 8.—The following news was received here to-day by military express:

A desperate and terrible battle insting all day, took place at Valverde, ten miles south of Fort Craig, on the 21st of February. The fight was probably resumed again on the 22st. The loss is great on both sides.

Both parties claim the victory. A regiment of New Mexicans, commanded by Capt. McRae, who had charge of our artillery and every one of his command were killed at their post, and their cannon was taken by the rebels. Kit Carson was within 15 miles of Fort Craig. Firing was heard from his direction, with what result was not ascertained at the time the nessenger left.
